An Australasian Journal of Medieval and Early Modern Studies

Ceræ: An Australasian Journal of Medieval and Early Modern Studies is a peer-reviewed, interdisciplinary journal directed by a committee of Australian and international graduate students and early career researchers. The journal is committed to open-access publishing, exploring the possibilities of the digital humanities, and forging a strong community of medieval and early modern scholars. Ceræ publishes special themed issues each year and also accepts non-themed article submissions at any time. We especially encourage submissions from graduate students and early career researchers. Articles should be of approx. 5000–8000 words, though shorter varia will also be considered for publication. Previous issues, submission guidelines, and details of our annual essay prize can be found online.
